

Nonverbal semiotics: role and understanding of sign language in a communicative space

N. Abueva, Z. Temirkhanova, A. Archilaeva

Nonverbal interaction plays an important role in communication between people, despite the fact that the number of informational conversational gestures is very small, perhaps too small compared to information that may be speech, which has a great communicative value. The conditions under which nonverbal behavior becomes a form of communication are of central interest to the fundamentals of semiotics. Non-verbal semiotics is the nonverbal signaling system, which has all attributes of sign system. The object of research in non-verbal semiotics is nonverbal behavior, in another words, non-verbal communication [15, p. 387].

Keywords: non-verbal semiotics, non-verbal communication, language, gestures
