N.Ya. Danilevsky on Russia's place in the world culture (200 years since the birth of the Russian thinker)

A.V. Belov

It is proved that the logical course of the pluralistic approach to world history developed in the book by N.Ya. Danilevsky "Russia and Europe" is typologically complicated and presented as a change of "preparatory" cultures — Egyptian, Babylonian and Iranian, including "solitary" ones — Chinese and Indian, in which everything was mixed: religion, culture, politics, economics, "mono-basic" (Jewish, Greek and Roman) and "dual-basic" (Germanic-Roman). N.Ya. Danilevsky predicted that perhaps in the future the Slavic cultural-historical type would take the place of the first "complete four-basic type of culture" in the history of world culture. It is shown the significance of N.Ya. Danilevsky's study about cultural and historic types for modernity.
