

Political and sociomedical features of the Eastern War of 1853–1856

M.A. Gutieva, A. Bezverbny

The political and socio-medical features of the Eastern War (1853–1856) are considered. The political implications and consequences of this military conflict of the mid-19th century are analyzed on the basis of an integrated and systematic analysis, in the context of socio-cultural development and the specifics of the healthcare system of the countries of the world. The medico-social ideas of prominent figures of Russia and the world formed the basis for the development of new approaches to the organization of health care, as well as the creation of places of remembrance in peacetime and post-war times, which led to the reform of the healthcare system of the army, military hospitals, as well as the use and creation of memorial sites in countries worldwide.

Keywords: Eastern War, places of memory, public health, corruption, F Nightingale, NI Pirogov, hospital
