Secularization of the public administration system in Great Britain in the first half of the XIX century

E. Sklyarova, A. Egorov

The features of the secularization of the British public administration system in the first half of the 19th century are considered in the context of the formation of the country's social policy. Based on the historical and genetic research method, it is noted that in the era of urbanization in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the process of secularization of public administration began by abandoning the parish system of assistance to paupers and migrants. In the first half of the XIX century. The influence of religion on the social development and governance of UK cities has decreased with the transition of the United Kingdom to social politics.
