

The paradigm of Soviet philosophy and its fate

V. Takhtamyshev

Official philosophy in Soviet Russia was an institutional form of knowledge production of a worldview nature. The paradigm of this philosophy is its substantive, methodological, axiological and target features. Chief among these features were materialism and dialectics as the theoretical foundations of mainstream ideology. Due to the fact that this paradigm was internally contradictory, its implementation was unsuccessful, and the paradigm itself was abolished without its serious analysis, criticism and preservation of its positive content. As a result, the current state of Russian philosophy is unsatisfactory: it has dissolved in the pluralism of various private concepts and has lost its purpose – to determine the main contours of the natural and social reality in which modern man is located.
