The principle of collective responsibility as a mental basis for achieving success at all levels of the educational process

T. Golodze

An understanding of the principle of collective responsibility is presented. It is shown that the idea of collective responsibility within learning groups will be harmoniously interwoven into the fabric of the entire structural order of the education system and related human life systems. The most important stage of the research is reflected in the philosophical justification and the proposal to document and functionally implement the principle of collective responsibility as the most important correlate of the mental attitude of consciousness for total success at all levels of the educational process.

Keywords: educational process, the principle of collective responsibility, education, student development, mental attitude, ethics
