The International Conference in Dumbarton Oaks 1944: cooperation and contradictions of the Axis countries

O. Zhukovets, D. Remizov

The features of the organization, international cooperation and opposition of the Axis countries during the 1944 Dumbarton Oaks conference in the final period of the Second World War are considered. The main factors and features of this conference, held in the USA, are analyzed. It is concluded that the conference was controlled by special intelligence services, US millionaires. It is noted that the USSR proposed to resolve the issue of joining the UN of all the republics of the USSR. The USSR's position was adopted that any new international organization wishing to govern the new world order was doomed to political failure without equal treatment of the USSR.
