Globalization and religious diversity

A. Matetskaya

The article considers the reasons for the growth of religious diversity in the global world: international migrations, cultural exchange and cultural influence through modern media and Internet and mass culture, missionary activity of religious organizations, the global spread of western secular model of relations between religion and the state, religion and society. These factors led to transforming of religion landscape of national states and the religious situation in the world. It is concluded that in the globalizing world the religions becomes "delocalized". It means that historically established links between religions, territories and national communities are transformed.

Keywords: globalization, religion, migration, religious diversity, secularization, media, new religions
