Conversion of forms of power (Elements of the modern theory of realistic humanism)

T.I. Eroshenko, I. Vasilenko, A. Fedosenko

The author analyzes the relationship of changes in the status of the class "in-itself" and the class "for-itself" in connection with the acquisition or loss of state power on the example of the political activity of the working class. Loss of class status class "for-itself" means for them loss of state power as well. The loss of state power — means its "return" to a class "in-itself". The social mechanism that determines this dynamics is the conversion of the functionaries (officials) of their power into personal property, and then capital as well, against the background of the objective need to preserve market relations and the world domination of monopolistic capital.

Keywords: socialist state, the early socialist state, the social mechanics of the collapse of the state, social state, social state socialist, non-socialist social state, theory of real humanism, the bourgeoisie as a class "for-itself", the working class as a class "in itself", the working class as a class "for itself"
