Modern world in the context of globalization: civilization transformations, challenges of religious and political extremism and counteraction by means of ethnic culture

T.U. Elbuzdukaeva, M. Soltamuradov, V. Akaev

The modern world in the context of globalization is experiencing tangible civilizational transformations, humanity is in socio-cultural regulation, during which there is integration, the achievement of universality. But at the same time, differentiation, fragmentation of public life, the interconnection of its various components are carried out, while maintaining continuity, a sharp social polarization occurs, when colossal wealth accumulates on one pole of society, regions, and on the other pole and misery. Increasingly, anti-globalists make themselves known, forces demanding social justice, religious and political extremists make themselves known. The modern world is complex, contradictory, multipolar, conflict, and its existence is not possible without the cultural interaction of countries and peoples, without carrying out their joint activities. After all, the development of mankind has occurred and is proceeding through a variety of cultural, scientific, technical and technological achievements, and their use is both a blessing for a person, nations, and has a negative side. At the regional level, it is important to mobilize an ethnocultural resource in order to counteract radicalist and extremist manifestations.
