The perception of justice as a process of social interaction in society

R. Shamileva, L. Ismailova

It is analyzed some aspects of the perception of social justice by individuals in the modern social environment. The deepening of the crisis phenomena of various spheres of life in the current socio-cultural situation caused, first of all, the regeneration of the disorder not only of the social structure, but also social injustice in the international space, in connection with which the authors substantiate the need to find ways to overcome destructive processes, primarily through a systematic analysis of their identification and study. It is stated that in solving this problem, an important role is played by the study of individuals' ideas about social justice, through its perception both at the social and subjective levels. The purpose of the article is to consider the process of transformation of ideas about social justice, actualized both at the ontological and cognitive level of its perception by various social communities and individuals.
